Finally Finds Honesty Is Best Policy

By JAMES MARLOW Associated Press News Analyst

WASHINGTON (AP) - Charles Van Doren, who got fame and fortune by taking credit for knowing more than he knew, finally decided on honesty as the best policyfor non-intellectual reasons.

In the end this may be the source of the bitterest remorse for this 33-year old ex-tenence who had preceded the glories of the intellectual life. Columbia University accepted his resignation Alon-

Van Doren stressed the mental tortures he endured before deciding to admit he got help in winning $129,000 on the sigged TV quiz show. "Twenty-One"

Actually, he lied as long as he could expect to get away with it. He arrived at his moment of truth only after he knew he faced possible prosecution for perjuty if ne kept on lying,

He didn't say this. He explained, Monday to a congressional committee investigating crooked TV quiz shows that "in the end it was a small thing that tipped the scales" in inducing him to own up to his deceit.

He said a woman, a stranger, wrote and told him that the only way he could ever live with himself was to tell the truth. It doesnot speak well for his intellectual processes to say this aphorism tipped the scales for him.

Van Doren grew up in a cuttured, intellectual world, a member of one of America's bestknown literary families. He had been exposed for years to philo-
